The Marginalization of Women Artists

Historically, women faced immense barriers in pursuing careers as artists. These obstacles stemmed from societal expectations, limited access to formal training, and institutional biases. Key issues include:

Forgotten Women aims to challenge these narratives by unearthing stories of resilience and artistic brilliance.

- Societal dismissiveness or outright hostility
- Limited or no access to formal art institutions
- Family obligations that conflicted with their careers

- Frida Kahlo's ongoing struggle with health issues and emotional turmoil, which fueled her raw, autobiographical art.
- Rosa Bonheur's fight for acceptance in the male-dominated world of animal painting and her choice to wear men's clothing for work.

Forgotten Women celebrates these acts of defiance, framing their art as acts of resistance and self-assertion.
